

RESTORE BRITAIN: SIX FACTS YOU NEED TO KNOW

1 RESTORE WELCOMES NEO-NAZIS & FASCISTS

Restore's leadership says it rejects neo-Nazism. In truth, it is full of antisemites and known fascists.

During Restore's September 2026 Holborn and St Pancras by-election campaign, former BNP national treasurer Michael Newland was photographed distributing Restore literature and addressing activists. Callum Barker, formerly active in the neo-Nazi Homeland Party, also appeared in campaign material. Restore candidate Tyler Johnson's official proposer, Patrick McGinnis, had published a video blaming "Jewish ideas" for Britain's problems.

The extreme racism goes right to the top. Restore national campaigns director Charlie Downes has said, "What is desirable is an ethnically homogenous Christian Britain."

Elliot Lowe is a rabid neo-Nazi who has been active in Restore Manchester and was pictured with Rupert Lowe.

Eddy Butler, the former National Elections Officer for the BNP, is also a Restore activist in Essex. Sam Melia, a leading figure in the neo-Nazi Patriotic Alternative group, joined Restore after leaving prison and said he wanted to stand for Parliament. James Allchurch, jailed for racist and antisemitic Radio Aryan broadcasts, joined the party too.

2 RESTORE WANTS A WHITE BRITAIN

Restore's buzzword is "remigration", which is a code for ethnic cleansing. It means removing those who fail the test of "white Britishness". Some Restore figures claim Jewish people are not English, suggesting they think they should be deported too.

Restore policy papers say that ethnic minorities have roots in Britain that are "shallow by comparison" with the "native majority".

Restore's official immigration policy proposes deporting legally resident foreign nationals if they claim benefits, live in social housing or are judged not to have integrated. It states: "If that means millions go, then millions go."

3 RESTORE WANTS TO "UTTERLY CRUSH" POLITICAL OPPOSITION

Senior Restore official Charlie Downes has said his party would "utterly crush" its political opponents if it achieved office: "The Left' as it currently exists simply will not exist anymore."

He added: "I am not interested in their 'right to protest' or whatever else. They hate us, they are enemies of European civilisation, they will be destroyed."

Rupert Lowe has promised that a Restore government would prosecute "hundreds, if not thousands" of civil servants. He said they would go to prison and urged supporters to use Restore as their "voice", "weapon" and "threat".

One major Restore donor has gone considerably further.

Tom Watson—a Worcester businessman—has been building what he calls a “Traitorbase”. Watson says his database gathers information on judges, lawyers, charity workers and aid workers. After Lowe threatened prosecutions, Watson wrote: “The Traitorbase will be used at the trials.”

Connor Tomlinson, a podcaster associated with Restore, said the party would “smash the public sector unions”.

Restore presents itself as a defender of “free speech” and “direct democracy”. In truth, it wants to suppress political opposition.

4 RESTORE IS RIFE WITH SEXISM

One prominent woman in Restore left the party after senior figures allegedly told her “women shouldn’t be in politics”.

Lowe was kicked out of Reform UK after it alleged he made “derogatory and discriminatory remarks about women”. A report into the incident found “credible evidence” of the “unlawful harassment of two women” by Lowe and two members of his staff in Lowe’s parliamentary office. Lowe denies these allegations.

A party organiser, Nick Seton-Rogers resigned citing “a deeply misogynistic” and “very nasty underbelly” in Restore. A party election candidate, Jez Hermer, described seeing overt misogyny in forums associated with Restore.

Restore figures argue for huge restrictions on the right to access abortion.

Carl Benjamin, a prominent Restore-supporting podcaster, has said that hostility towards the alleged sex trafficker and paedophile Andrew Tate is “misplaced”. Benjamin told a Labour MP he “wouldn’t even rape” her.

They say refugees, migrants and Muslims are a threat to “our women”, but the real threat is from Restore’s disgusting misogynistic politics.

5 RESTORE IS BUILDING LINKS WITH INTERNATIONAL FASCISTS

Restore is part of an international network of fascist, racial nationalist and “remigration” organisations.

In May, Rupert Lowe signed the “Save Europe Act”, launched at the Remigration Summit in Portugal. The summit brought together activists from several countries around demands to stop non-European immigration and organise mass deportations. Austrian fascist leader Martin Sellner, one of Europe’s leading promoters of “remigration”, has said Restore is among the parties closest to his politics.

Sellner was sent a large donation by Brenton Tarrant, the fascist terrorist who murdered 51 people in an Islamophobic attack in Christchurch, New Zealand, in 2019.

Restore spokesman and campaigns director Charlie Downes travelled to Canada in August to speak at the Dominion Society’s DomCon conference. He appeared on the programme alongside Sellner. The Canadian Anti-Hate Network describes the Dominion Society as a white-nationalist organisation.

6 RESTORE HATES THE WORKING CLASS

Restore presents itself as the party of Britain’s “grafters”. But its economic programme proposes deep cuts to welfare and state

It wants to remove £178 billion from public spending by freezing working-age benefits and cutting large areas of government expenditure.

Restore says claimants would be required to do jobs such as picking litter, cleaning graffiti and clearing drains, with benefits withdrawn from anyone who is judged to be “slacking”.

At the same time, Restore proposes around £155 billion of tax cuts to help the rich, including reducing corporation tax.

Is this any surprise? Restore is backed by Elon Musk, the richest man on Earth. Rupert Lowe is a banker who attended elite public schools.

Restore’s plan is to divide ordinary people with racism and then push through major attacks on the working class.
